How to read an entry — Böhtlingk & Roth, Sanskrit-Wörterbuch (PWG, 1855–1875)

A specimen page after the model of Duden's Deutsches Universalwörterbuch entry-anatomy spread: real entries, re-typeset from the Cologne digital text, with every microstructural element labelled. Entries: the four homographs of heman (with derivatives) and the root √cumb.

Homograph numbers distinguish identically spelt but etymologically distinct words — four different heman follow one another

Headword in Devanāgarī, exactly as printed — no transliteration is given in PWG (here hemán 'impulse')

Etymology in parentheses: derived from homograph 1 of the root hi 'to impel'

Grammatical gender (m. = masculine; the following homographs show n. and adj.)

German gloss in italics — PWG defines in German (Antrieb 'impulse')

Vedic saṃhitā quotation with tonal accents: anudātta bar below, svarita stroke above the syllable — reproduced from the accented Ṛgveda text

Citation with exact locus: ṚV. 9,97,1 = Ṛgveda, maṇḍala 9, hymn 97, verse 1 — every sense is documented from the literature

Commentators' dissent recorded: Sāyaṇa glosses the word as 'gold' in this passage

Sense numbering 1) 2) 3) 4) inside one homograph

Variant reading from a specific edition (the Calcutta edition of the Mahābhārata)

Run-on citations: the repeated source is abbreviated away — '1,81' silently continues HALĀY.

Accent distinguishes homographs: hé-man 'winter' (udātta on the first syllable) vs. hemán above — the stroke position is lexically significant

Usage restriction: attested only in the locative case ('in winter')

Indian grammatical apparatus: membership in a gaṇa (Pāṇini's word-lists) is part of the lexical record

Compounds follow as separate entries: hema-nābhi 'gold-nave', with a full quotation showing the word in context

N. pr. = nomen proprium; a Yakṣa named 'Gold-Eye' — proper names are glossed etymologically in parentheses

√ marks a verbal root — the root article is the anchor of the verbal system (√cumb 'to kiss')

Present stem with accent (cúmbati) given right after the root — the udātta stroke marks the tone

Dhātupāṭha reference (11,39): the Indian root-list defines class and meaning; Western and Indian lexicography meet here

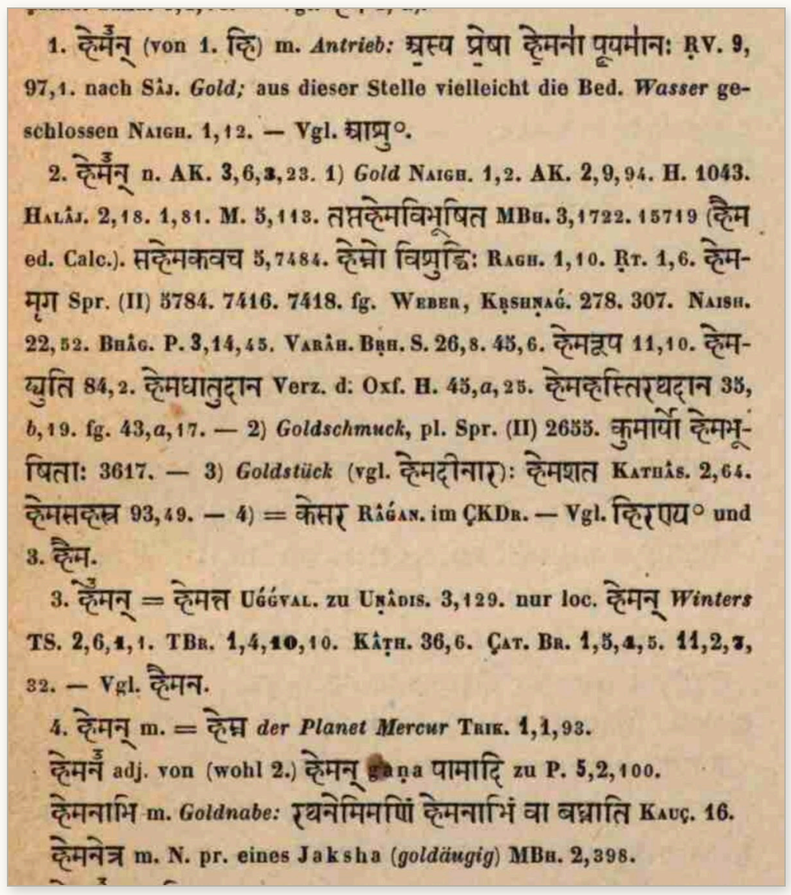

Poetic examples quoted in full: '(he) kissed her softly on the cheek' (Harivaṃśa 8745)

Voice and derived-stem labels: med. = middle voice, caus. = causative ('to let kiss'), each with its own attestations

so v. a. ('so viel als') introduces an extended meaning: 'to touch with the mouth' — of two conches blown like a kiss

v. l. = varia lectio, a variant reading in the Dhātupāṭha tradition itself

Prefixed verbs nest inside the root article: — pari 'to kiss all over' (a bee kissing the mango blossom), then — vi; the dash repeats the root

How to use this page

The column re-typesets entries from the digital PWG text (Cologne, csl-orig v02) in the layout of the printed original; each label explains one element of the entry architecture. PWG (the 'large Petersburg dictionary', 1855–1875, 7 vols.) is the foundational dictionary of Western Sanskrit philology: German definitions, Devanāgarī lemmata, exhaustive citations with exact loci, and the Indian grammatical tradition (Dhātupāṭha, gaṇas, commentators) built into every article. Column captions give the print locus (volume–column) encoded as <pc> in the digital record.
